4. USING COOKIES

Our Site uses cookies.

The information listed below is intended to inform the user about the placement, use and administration of cookies used by the site www.premierpalace.ro.

Here are some useful links related to this topic. Please read carefully the information listed below.

To comply to the requirements set forth by Law no. 506 from 11.17.2004 regarding the use of personal data and protection of private life in electronic communication sector and the GDPR, all users of the Site are requested to consent before we transmit cookies on their computers. Our Site uses own cookies and cookies from third parties to offer its users a better navigation experience and services adapted to the needs and interests of the users. Cookies play an important role in facilitating the access and delivery of multiple services that the user enjoys on the internet, like: certain settings, like language, and the access to older preferences through back and forth buttons.

The cookies offer the owners of the site with valuable feedback on how the sites are used by users, so they can make their sites more user friendly. They allow multimedia applications or any other type of application from other sites to be included in one specific site to create a better, more useful navigation experience.

Cookies improve online advertising.

What are cookies?

Cookies are text fragments placed by the sites that you visit in your computer, mobile terminal or any other equipment that you access the internet from.

This automatic data storage technology has its very wide spread and it is used to collect information like: the type of browser and operating system, the source page, the name of the domain that the visitor connected to the site.

The purpose of using cookies is to understand how users use this web page and to help us adapt the content of our website to better fit your needs.

The cookies are installed through the request issued by the web-server of a browser (exp: Internet Explorer, Chrome) and is completely “passive” (it does not contain software programs and cannot access information from the user’s hard drive).

Cookies themselves do not require personal data to be used and, in most cases, does not identify the internet users by person.

There are 2 types of cookies:

- Session cookies- these are temporary stored in the cookies folder of your web browser so this can memorize them until the user leaves the web page or closes the browser.
- Persistent cookies – these are stored on the hard drive of the computer or equipment (and, in general, depend on the life time preset for the cookies). Persistent cookies also include those cookies placed by other websites than the one visited by the user and are known as their parties cookies and can be used anonymously to store the users interests, so that the advertising can be more relevant for the user. The third parties have to comply with the law enforced and privacy policies of the website owners.

Why are cookies so important for the internet?

Cookies represent the central point of operation for efficient internet usage, helping generate a friendly browsing experience adapted to the preferences and needs of each user. Refusing or disabling cookies can make some websites impossible to use.

A cookie contains information that connects the web browser (user) and web server. If the browser accesses the again the web server, this can read the last information stored and react in consequence. Examples of important uses of cookies (that do not need the user login through an account) – content and services adapted to the user’s needs- news content, weather, sport, maps, public and government services, entertainment and travel websites. – Offers adapted to the user’s interests – remember password, language preferences. – Remembering child protection filters for content on the internet (family more options, safe search functions). – Measurement and optimization of analytic features-confirmation of website traffic, what content is better viewed and how the user gets to the website (search engines, directly, through other websites). Websites run these analyzes of their use to improve sites in the benefit of the users.

Why do we use cookies?

We use cookies so we can offer a personalized service for our users. www.premierpalace.ro can use cookies so it can facilitate the following and storage of your preferences. As an example, we can use cookies so we can identify you and better offer you information and services based on the preferences set on your previous visits on the website. Third parties of online advertising can use cookies to better adapt publicity messages based on your preferences.

Cookies usage is a current standard for most of the sites that you visit. Most browsers are set to accept cookies. If you do not want to accept cookies, you can reset your browser to let you know each time you receive cookies or to deny cookies all the time. You have to know that some sections of our website cannot be accessed if you do not accept cookies. You must remember that, whenever you voluntarily disclose personal information in the online environment, email program, FTP program, messenger, your information can be easily collected and used by unauthorized persons.

Even though premierpalace.ro makes all the effort to protect your personal information, SC.PREMIER PALACE S.R.L. cannot assure and guarantee the security of any time of information that you transmit, so sending information in an improper environment is done at your own risk. You have to understand that you are sole responsible for your secret information (passwords, user name), on the accounts that you set up using our services.

Security and confidentiality issues

Cookies are NOT viruses! Cookies use plain text format. They are not made of code sequences, so they cannot be executed and cannot auto execute. Therefore they cannot multiply on other networks. Because they cannot perform these functions, they cannot be considered viruses.

Cookies can still be used in negative purposes. Because they store information about preferences and navigation history of the users, on one or more websites, cookies can be used as Spyware. A lot of anti-spyware products are aware of this fact and constantly mark cookies so they can be deleted later.

In general, browsers have integrated privacy settings that offer different levels of cookies acceptance, validity period and automatic delete after the user visited a certain website.

Advices for a safer, more responsible web navigation, based on cookies. Customize your browser settings to reflect a comfortable level of cookies acceptance.

If you have shared access to a computer, you can consider setting your browser to delete individual navigation data every time you close the browser. This is one way to access sites that place cookies and to delete any visit information after the navigation session is over. Install and update spyware applications. A lot of these applications that detect and prevent spyware include website attacks detection. They prevent the browser to access websites that can explore website vulnerabilities or download dangerous software.

What can stop cookies?

Disabling and refusing the acceptance of cookies can make some sites unusable or difficult to use or visit. It is possible to set your browser not to accept cookies or to accept cookies from certain websites. For example, if a visitor's browser does not accept cookies, he cannot leave a comment. All modern browsers offer that possibility of changing cookies settings. These settings are found in Options/Settings or in the Preferences/Favorites menus of your browser.
